TALE OF BUTCHERY.

Martin Thorn's Story From the Witness Stand.

The Prisoner Relates the Horrible Details of Goldenstuppe's Murder—Still Accuses Mrs. Nack.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Word was passed around among the women who appeared of the Queens county court house today to seek admission to the Thorn trial that much of the evidence which the defense would introduce would be unfit for polite ears. The result was that only three women were among the spectators when Judge Maddox requested quiet for the trial of the alleged murderer of Goldenstuppe. Before Mr. Howe began his opening address, John Gotha, the barber, was recalled. Mr. Howe asked him if he had ever been an inmate of an asylum at Fort Hamilton. The witness said "No." Mr. Howe repeated the question, pronouncing each word with deliberation. Gotha thought a moment and then uttered an emphatic no. "That is all I want of you," said the lawyer, and Gotha left the room. Mr. Howe requested the court to dismiss the charge of murder in the first degree and the court denied the request. Mr. Howe then began his address with a declaration of Thorn's innocence supplemented with a terrible arrangement of Mrs. Nack, who was denounced as the real murderer of Goldenstuppe.

At the conclusion of Mr. Howe's address he asked that before the case was closed the jurymen should be permitted to view the premises at Woodside. The district attorney said he would like to think over the proposition before informing the court of his views. The defense called several witnesses to testify to the prisoner's good character and after a short recess Thorn was put upon the stand to testify in his own behalf.

THORN'S STORY.

Beginning with the statement that he came to America seventeen years ago, the prisoner said his real name was Fecowatsky and briefly related the facts of his life up to the time he met Mrs. Nack eighteen months ago. Goldenstuppe was boarding with Mrs. Nack at that time.

"I rented a furnished room from her at $7 a week," said Thorn. "Later I understood Goldenstuppe was her husband. She first made love to me and I returned her love. I was very fond of her and loved her up to the moment she took the witness stand on my first trial."

The prisoner then told how he supplanted the bath rubber in Mrs. Nack's affections and described the row he had with Goldenstuppe in consequence last February. During this row Goldenstuppe caught hold of him. Thorn held a revolver which went off accidentally. Then Goldenstuppe took the pistol from him and gave him a beating. The prisoner left the house and went to a hospital. Mrs. Nack met him afterwards very often and they went to the theaters and other places of amusement. She said she was sorry that Goldenstuppe had hurt him, but that he must not heal that. Then, at the suggestion of his counsel, then told in his own way what Mrs. Nack had said to him after that. The court directed Mr. Howe not to lead the witness.

"Mrs. Nack told me," said Thorn, "that she wished to leave Goldenstuppe and wished to live in some quiet place. We visited the Wood side cottage and as it seemed a suitable place we hired the cottage. I paid the $15 and got the key.

"On the 25th of June I gave the key to Mrs. Nack, as she said she wanted to do some cleaning at the cottage. About 11 or 12 o'clock on Friday morning June 25, Mrs. Nack met me at the door. She said: 'I have Goldenstuppe up stairs.' I asked her what he was doing there. She replied: 'He is dead, I have shot him.' She then requested me to help her dispose of the body.

"I went up stairs and helped to undress the body. Then we carried it to the bath tub. I went out and bought some plaster of paris. When I came back she began cutting up the body. She cut the head off with a small saw. Then she cut through the middle of the body and when I asked her why she cut so, she replied: 'I know enough not to cut through the bowels.'

"Next she cut off the legs after which she went out for a while, as it was very warm in there. On her return we emptied the head in the plaster of paris. We brought away the dead man's clothes in a bundle, and I carried the head in another bundle.

"The saw, knife and revolver were in the bundle with the clothes. We took the car to the ferry street ferry over which we crossed to New York. I threw the head overboard while the boat was crossing the river. Then we went to Mrs. Nack's house on Ninth avenue, where she burned the clothes in the cooking stove."

The witness then told of the car ride on the following day, Saturday, June 26, and the disposition of the other portions of the remains, which were wrapped up in old cloth, cheese cloth and paper, which Mrs. Nack had purchased prior to her visit to the cottage on June 25th, the day of the killing.

Thorn told of his meetings with the woman after this, and how Mrs. Nack had made preparations to go to Europe. Mrs. Nack met him on Tuesday night, June 30, and the following day he learned from the papers that she had been arrested.

He explained his conversation with Gotha. He said that he had told Gotha that Mrs. Nack killed Goldenstuppe and also told the barber how the body was cut up and deposed of. He told Gotha of his intention to give himself up to the police, but Gotha asked him to wait. He gave Gotha some pawn tickets and made an appointment to meet him the following night. Thorn kept the appointment and was arrested. During his conversation with Captain O'Brien, Thorn said, he told the detective some truths and some falsehoods. During the time he was giving this direct testimony Thorn looked directly at the jury. He spoke distinctly, although at times his voice dropped to a rather low tone. His direct examination lasted three-quarters of an hour. District Attorney Weller conducted the cross-examination.

Superintendent Gasoline Arrests a Dangerous Crook.

He Is From Kendallville and Was Up Answering to Charges of Stolen Hides When He Was Arrested.

If Thomas Reed, of Kendallville, spends the next few years in a prison, he may thank the police department of this city, whose vigilance resulted in his capture.

Several days ago Superintendent Gasoline was informed that a number of hides had been stolen from near Columbia City and was requested to keep a sharp looked for the thieves. He did so, and as a result Thomas Reed, of Kendallville, is under arrest. Reed was caught this morning at a junk store on Clinton street, the proprietors of which had been told by the superintendent to inform him if any hides were offered for sale by strangers.

He had fourteen hides that he had endeavored to dispose of. As the number reported stolen from Columbia City was but seven, telephonic communication was had with the prisoner's home, Kendallville, and City Marshal Berhalter, of that place, reported the theft of fourteen hides of a butcher near there. After considerable urging Reed finally indirectly admitted being implicated in the theft.

City Marshal Berhalter arrived here this afternoon and will take his prisoner back with him. He says that the prisoner, who is a young man, is a dangerous person to be at large and is a former inmate of the Plainfield reformatory.

MARK TWAIN

Writes of the Riots in the Reichsrath as He Saw Them.

A Graphic Description of Saturday's Tumult in the Austrian Chamber—Would Not Have Missed It.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—Mark Twain writes to the World from Vienna: "In the Austrian house of deputies on Thanksgiving day, in the midst of a deafening tumult, I saw a motion read which nobody heard and passed by nobody knows whom—for, indeed, it was not passed at all. It was aimed at the obstructionists and placed autocratic powers in the hands of the president of the parliament. This was a victory for the government, but was valuelessly won and was a sample nomination.

"Naturally, Saturday's session would be historical. I went early, arriving when the house was empty. In half an hour (ten or three hundred members were present on the floor and the galleries were packed. I was in a gallery exactly opposite the president's tribune and had a perfect view. There was not much noise then, but the atmosphere was charged with suspense and expectancy. All the vast house was holding its breath.

"A long wait, then a stir, a craning of necks, and by a door far to the right the president and vice presidents erupted. The house rose and a hurricane of insults and execrations burst from the opposition and blew them to their places. The right answered back, and both sides roared and shouted and stormed. Two dozen socialists stood in a body before the ministerial desks, shouted up at the president and shook their fists furiously at him. He addressed some words to the house—at least one could see his lips move—and he spread his large hand deprecatingly over his breast. If he is a tyrant, he has some heartbreaking, persuasive gentleness not seen elsewhere but among the angels.

"That holy gesture seemed to madden the group of socialists. All at once they plunged over the barriers and up through the ministerial desks and benches. One in a red cravat reached up and snatched the president's papers. Another seized his bell. In a moment they were fighting and struggling with uniformed servants of the house, who ejected them. At the same time others of their group stood up on the side of the tribune, drove out the president and vice presidents and followed them across the floor, hammering the latter with their fists. But I saw no blow actually reach the president.

"The socialists came back, occupied the president's tribune and held it like a fort. The man in the red cravat gathered up an armful of the president's papers and threw them over the front in a sort of snow storm. Meanwhile, the whole house was howling, yelling and lunging on the desks. A South African thunder storm is silent compared to it. Hawks' secondrels, those and less delicate epithets filled the air.

"All of a sudden that distant door opened and down the floor of the brilliant and superb chamber, drifted the spectacle and gleam of sixty spiked helmets. It was the most thrilling theatrical surprise I ever saw. I would not have missed it for the succession to the throne. Moreover, it was history and belongs among the world's memorable days. This force was received with a tempest of execrations from the one party and with victory notes from the other; yet, it was a heavy defeat for all concerned.

"The handsome officer in command stood nothing for the reception. He went up into the tribune and requested the socialist garrison to retire. They declined. Then he stepped aside and his men pulled, hauled and dragged the fighting, struggling garrison down from their fort and out of the door, and the amazing drama was finished."

Miss Alberta Snider, of 29 Prospect avenue, has received from her teacher, Mrs. Louis M. Snider, who is now in Denver, Col., the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Sam Smith, a letter in which Mrs. Snider says she is much improved in health. The venerable lady went to Colorado some time ago in the hope that the climate would benefit her, and her friends will be much pleased to learn of her improvement.

A NEW POSITION.

St. Louis Labor Leaders Don't Want Immigration Restricted.

The Central Labor Union Adopts Resolutions Declaring Against the Spirit of Progress.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 29.—By a vote of forty one to five the delegates to the Central Trades and Labor union placed themselves on record as being opposed to further restriction of immigration. The question was discussed for over three hours.

A resolution was passed which sets forth that restriction of immigration is in direct contradiction to the progressive spirit of the age, and is a reactionary attempt to check the progressive movement of wage earners of all countries.

The resolution further held that immigration is not responsible for the present condition of wage workers. This and other countries have been suffering for several years from the result of certain economic conditions which may in the near future cause a new and more serious industrial and commercial crisis regardless of immigration.

A notification of the proceedings will be sent to the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor.

EVANGELIST COOMBS

Preaches Two Interesting Sermons at West Creighton Avenue Church.

Yesterday afternoon Evangelist Coombs preached to a large audience of men at the Creighton avenue Christian church. His subject was "Hunting for a Man." He said that it is hard even in this day to find a being that measures upon all sides a true man. In order for this being to be called a man he must have a conscience, a tender heart, convictions and religion.

In the evening the large auditorium was crowded to overflowing. Mr. Coombs preached upon "Progress in Religious Reformation." He said:

"Step by step the people departed from the apostolic church. The first step was man worship. They began to be followers of Paul, Peter and Apollos. The second step was the formation of the authority of the New Testament. 254. The third was the formation of the first human creed. 325. The fourth step was the changing of the ordinances. 1311. The last step was when man was exalted above God. The first step back toward God was the reformation of Luther. Then John Calvin came next to exalt the sovereignty of God. John Wesley came and called the people back to a godly life. Roger Williams restored the ordinances, while Alexander Campbell called the people back to the one name, Christian; to the one book, the Bible, and to the one confession, 'Jesus is the Christ.' Martin Luther attempted to reform the Catholic church, Wesley attempted to reform the Episcopal church, but the Campbells did not attempt to reform but to restore the Apostolic church. They never attempted to organize a church. They simply asked people to come back to the apostolic church. They did not ask people to get into the Methodist car, the Baptist car or the Lutheran car, but to move forward and enter the Christian car."

The evangelist had nine cars, representing nine different religious movements, placed before his audience. Tonight he says he will take a peep at the people in each car and then decide which is the through car.

FOUGHT AGES AGO.

Prehistoric Battlefield Found in Indian Territory.

WICHITA, Kas., Nov. 29.—The greatest prehistoric battle and burying ground yet discovered in the United States has just been found near the little town of Redlands, I. T. It is on the northern border of the Choctaw Indian reservation and near the Arkansas river.

Prof. Edwin Walters, the archaeologist who discovered it, states that from extensive excavations he has made he believes that nearly 100,000 warriors met death at that point and that the battle occurred 20,000 years ago. He goes a step further and declares the battle was fought between the mound builders and the Maya Toltec race, the latter coming from Yucatan and striving to wear the Mississippi valley from the mound builders.

The battle ground is thirty acres in area and by a series of excavations Professor Walters has satisfied himself that there are nearly 2,000 skeletons to every square acre. His estimate as to the magnitude of this prehistoric conflict is formed by a study of the peculiar structure of the formation in which the skeletons are found. The bones are buried near the top of a deep strata of sand and covered first with a sort of adobe, a formation of the quaternary period, then with an alluvial deposit.

They have been dug out by the cartload and also at every skull has from one to five arrow points sticking into it. Sharp arrow points and javelins are also found embedded in other bones of the body and the great number of these instruments of warfare that have been unearthed leave no doubt in the mind of Professor Walters that he has found what was once a field of awful carnage.

The skulls have narrow, receding foreheads and projecting chins and the skeletons vary greatly in length, some seeming to be those of dwarfs and others of a giant race. The bodies are buried in a circle, feet toward the center and most of them in a sitting posture. At the side of each is found a clay vessel that was evidently filled with food to stay the soul of the departed warrior on his way to the spirit land.

Professor Walters has for many years been studying the mounds and battle grounds of prehistoric races found in the Mississippi valley and declares that the mound builders established a line of defense from Omaha, Neb., south of the gulf of Mexico in their efforts to repel the invasion into their territory of the warlike race of Maya Toltecs.

HALF MILLION DEAD.

Appalling Record of Mortality in Cuba.

Starvation Causes the Victims by the Hundred Thousands—Praise of Weyler's Humanitarian Policy.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—A despatch to the World from Havana says:

The World's official figures of Cuba's starvation were finally mailed. They showed the death of only 200,000. But every painful fact on earthed tends to prove them nearly double that number. When the grim returns are all in it is now almost certain that this Cuban source of the innocents will reach 400,000. And this awful number does not include those killed in a battle, or the thousands and thousands of women and children who have died of exposure, disease and massacre in the "manigua" and swamps. It now seems certain that more than half a million people, for the most part loyal subjects of Spain, have been killed by Spanish war in Cuba.

A week's trip through the province of Havana, Matanzas and Santa Clara has tended to make moderate this tremendous and extreme figure. The figures of Spanish official reports show but a part of the mortality. They only give the number buried in consecrated ground. They do not give them fully. And, yet, these official ultra-Spanish reports of burial permits proved admit that in the province of Santa Clara there have died and been buried since Weyler's fiat 71,001 persons.

The number of people for whose relief our Weyler is directly responsible is 225,152 in Santa Clara province, and of these he has killed 50,216, or over one half of them. Santa Clara has so far been by far the most destitute of the provinces. It has many coffee and not a very thick population. Between its 28 percent dead to Pinar del Rio's admitted sixty cent mortality, respectively, these percentages are established now by the actual figures in some thirty cities and towns. Applied to the former populations of their respective provinces, the total for the seven Weyler's "chaulo" will foot up nearly a million.

POLICE PICKUPS.

Detective Somers picked up August Fontz in an intoxicated condition on the Pennsylvania company's yards at an early hour Sunday morning. A fine of $1 was imposed.

Two arrests were made late Saturday for disturbance. Officer Paul filed a charge for that offence against James Cornell and Officer Murphy filed a similar charge against Henry O'Brien. Mayor Schoepf sent both men to jail for ten days.

A SWIFT SUMMONS.

Without an Instant's Warning He Is Crushed to Death by an Unfortunate Accident.

Samuel Greider, a farmer residing four and a half miles from the city on the Hoagland road, was killed almost instantly by a falling tree Saturday afternoon. Mr. Greider was clearing some land on his farm and with several others was chopping down a large tree when, without a warning, it fell to the ground. Most of the men succeeded in getting out of the way but Mr. Greider was caught by one of the boughs, which crushed his head and caused death almost instantly. The deceased was a prosperous farmer and was highly respected by his neighbors. A widow and family survive him.

NOT CAMPBELLITES.

We Think Some Reason for Intending to be Called Christians.

Every available space in the West Jefferson street Church of Christ was taken last night by earnest listeners to hear Evangelist Perry's sermon on "Eight Reasons Why We Refuse to be Called Campbellites." The sermon was delivered one week ago last Thursday evening, and it was repeated at the request of a very large number of people. The evangelist explained that he would as soon be called a Campbellite as any other human name. He believed it to be derisive and wrong to wear a religious name, the name of any man or method.

"We decree," he said, "to be known only as Christians, because this signifies followers of Christ. Paul condemned the wearing of the names of men, and said that whenever it is done it is evidence of carnality.

"Mr. Campbell was not the originator of the church of Christ or of any of the truth which we teach. He simply discovered apostolic ground, and led us both to stand upon it. Our Lord prayed for a union of all His people, and we can realize that only by a return to the teachings and practices of the apostolic church.

"Mr. Campbell was not crucified for us, nor were we baptized into his name. We are not and do not claim to be the only Christians, but we do insist on being known as Christians only, and as a church we are determined to be known only by such names as are applied to the church of the New Testament."

Mr. Perry will continue to preach this week each evening and his sermon tonight will be "The Great Commission."

LIFE'S VOYAGE ENDED

Death Beckons Three Persons and They Respond.

William Harrison, Isaac Sidel and William Davidson Pass to the Great Beyond.

William Harrison died at his home, 214 Barr street, at 10 o'clock last Saturday night, the immediate cause of death being heart failure.

For several years Mr. Harrison had been afflicted with asthma, but he suddenly appeared to be of a mild form and only at rare intervals was he unable to work. Last Saturday he was about his business as usual and in the evening ate heartily at the supper table. As was his custom, he retired early. Soon after wards he was taken with a smothering spell and was unable to breath. The family physician was called and he administered a restorative which in former occasions had speedily relieved the patient, but it failed to produce the desired effect. The heart became affected and its action more and more irregular until, at the hour mentioned, it ceased to perform its duties and the spirit of the beloved man took its flight to its eternal home. He was conscious up to the last moment.

Mr. Harrison leaves a widow and five daughters, the latter being Mrs. S. M. Foster, Mrs. Byron Hartzesley and the Misses Josephine and Maude Harrison, of this city, and Mrs. Charles L. Barker, of Omaha. The latter is visiting in the city and was at her father's bedside when the death summons came. Three brothers and a sister also survive the deceased, among them being Captain R. H. Harrison, who resides here, the other two brothers and the sister live in Ireland.

Mr. Harrison was born in Ireland sixty six years ago. When a youth he came to America and for a time resided in Canada, where he served an apprenticeship in a machine shop. In 1865 he came to Fort Wayne and took a position in the Pittsburg railway shops, where he worked constantly up to the time of his fatal illness. He was an expert mechanic and was possessed of qualities which endeared him to all with whom he became acquainted. He was particularly well liked by the shop officials and the employes, with whom he had been associated for so many years, and his sudden demise has caused a deep feeling of sorrow in that circle.

The funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at the residence at 2:30 o'clock. The interment will be private and at Lindenwood. The attendants of the bier will be D. N. Foster, W. Hatterslev, George Saylor, F. M. Smith, F. L. Taft and Sherman Byrd.

WILLIAM DAVIDSON.

Mrs. Joseph Slater, of 19 Hanson street, left last Saturday evening for Denver, Col., upon the receipt of a telegram conveying the intelligence of the death of her father, William Davidson, which occurred Saturday morning.

Mrs. Slater was greatly shocked by the news, she not having been prepared for it by any previous message telling of the illness of her father. The last letter she received from home and all the members of the family were in good health and it also gave the particulars of the celebration of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Davidson, which event took place on the 10th inst.

William Davidson, the deceased, was born in Scotland seventy two years ago. When a young man he came to America and afterwards to this city and engaged at his trade, that of a machinist. The exact date of his arrival in Fort Wayne is not known to the writer, but the records at Master Mechanic C. H. Fisher's office show that he entered the service of the Wabash company in April, 1856, and resigned in February, 1876, continuing in that service all the intervening years.

Sixteen years ago he left this city and went to Denver, near which place he resided upon a stock farm up to the time of his death.

ISAAC SIDEL.

Another sudden death was that of Isaac Sidel, a Wabash engineer, which occurred in Toledo Saturday evening. The news of his demise was conveyed to the city in a telegram to his two daughters, Mrs. Clarence Charles Weaver and William Minor, who reside here.

Mr. Sidel was a former citizen of Fort Wayne, coming here in the early fifties and taking a position as fireman on the Pittsburg road. He was promoted to engineer on that and the following year left that road and took a position with the Wabash. With the exception of a term of three or four years in the service of his country during the late rebellion he had been employed on the Wabash continuously up to the time of his death. While in the army he served as a locomotive engineer, hauling trains of soldiers and accoutrements of war, and he passed through some very exciting scenes. Many times was he and his engine the target for the rebels, but he passed through it all unharmed, though the sides of his cab were perforated by bullets.

Mr. Sidel, when the division terminal of the Wabash was changed from Fort Wayne to Ancerona, moved to Toledo, where he resided up to his death. His last trip over the road was last Friday, when he was at the throttle of the engine hauling passenger train No. 4, which passed through this city at 6:30 o'clock. He was then apparently in good health.

The Toledo Bee has the following account of his death:

Isaac Sidle, a Wabash engineer, died very suddenly at his home, 911 Locust street, at 9:35 last night from heart failure. He had been home all day, having just returned last night from a trip to Peru, Ind. He had been in perfect health and had so far as is known no premonition of his sudden death. He dropped over without any warning and died almost instantly.

Dr. Duncan was at once summoned, but life was extinct. The coroner was also notified and viewed the body. The dead man, who was sixty years of age, was strong and robust, showing little signs of his three score years. He was the oldest engineer in the employ of the Wabash, and one of the road's trusted employees. He was a widower and has two married children, both residing in Fort Wayne, Ind.

The deceased was a member of Fort Wayne lodge No. 14, I. O. O. F., which order will probably have charge of the funeral services, which are set for Wednesday morning after a wake from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Weaver, 42 Hoagland avenue.

Margaret Sidle, aged four years, died at the family residence, 185 Hayden street, yesterday afternoon of membranous croup. The funeral will take place tomorrow morning, at 9 o'clock, from the residence.

WABASH ENJOINED.

Order of Court Stops Work on Clay Street Bridge.

The Company Has No Permit from the City and Has Given Its Bonds Pending Its Grant.

By a restraining order issuing from the court of Judge O'Rourke, work on the new clay street bridge across the Wabash track came to a sudden end this afternoon. The injunction was prayed for by the city of Fort Wayne through Peter Eggeman, chairman of the board of public works, and William H. Shambaugh, city attorney.

The petition sets forth that the clay street bridge was built more than ten years ago, is unfit and unsafe, and that it was condemned on the 23d day of September last by the board of public works. The Wabash company signified willingness to build a new bridge and a permit and specifications were prepared by the board.

The old bridge was seventeen feet three inches high and the company asked to make the new structure some higher than this. The specifications limited the company to an additional height of twelve inches. A bond was prepared to protect the city and insure the faithful performance of all conditions expressed in the permit.

The company has never secured the permit from the board of works and has given no bond. Notwithstanding this the work of constructing a new bridge was undertaken. The board of works, the mayor, and city attorney visited the clay street crossing this morning, and saw the work in progress and learned that the new structure is to be twenty one feet nine inches high. This the petition further sets forth, will cause great inconvenience to the people living in the immediate vicinity. An injunction restraining the company from further prosecution of the work was therefore asked.

Judge O'Rourke issued a temporary restraining order and it was served on the local representatives of the defendant company and the men at work on the bridge this afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Whitney.

Two hours and fifteen minutes daily work by each able-bodied man, says Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor. If systematically applied, would relieve all the food, clothing and shelter the people need. Very true, no doubt. But the trouble is there are so many fellows who don't have to work and so many more who won't. We will probably hobble along on the same old tenfooter schedule for a time.

President M. Kiernan, it is believed will put his foot down hard on the spoilsmen of his party who purpose to wipe out the civil service law. The president has so far shown himself a friend of civil service reform. If he not only resists the pressure of the spoilsmen, but goes farther and gives them latin, the will earn the respect of all friends of good government.

No reasonable, right thinking person will contend that small boys and girls should be permitted to run the streets at late hours in the night. A large number of juvenile hundreds of them in fact, have such privilege absolutely unrestricted in Fort Wayne. Their parents are in some instances only careless, but in the cases of a great many, the parents, indifferent to the kind of morals their youngsters cultivate, would rather have them on the streets than to be "bothered" with them at home. This is wrong. It is detrimental to society. It should not be permitted. A curfew law will prevent it. Such a law will deal sensibly and effectively with the juvenile loafer question. It places direct and specific responsibility on parents for the discipline of their children.

Spain's scheme of autonomy for Cuba may be all right, but in the light of the tremendous opposition among the Spanish people to Cuban autonomy, suspicion is aroused that it is meant only to look well on paper. What is more, there is no apparent probability that the Cubans will accept it. Gomez has an army of 18,000 thoroughly seasoned and splendidly disciplined veterans. They are better armed than Cubans have ever been armed before and have besides a formidable complement of modern field artillery, including dynamite guns. The helpless and starving reconcentrados may be ready to accept autonomy, but with the soldiers of the insurgent army it is different. It is not likely they will lay down their arms unless Spain has failed so lamentably to carry them in the field.

Startling progress is being made with the beet sugar project in Allen county. Further work of the sensible and energetic character that has already been devoted to the preliminary development of the enterprise will bear quick fruit. The movement has been committed to capable hands in Fort Wayne and throughout the county, and having now been pushed beyond the pale of mere abstract discussion, may be hurried along to something tangible in the way of results. It has been proved by experiment that a great area in the county possesses soil peculiarly adapted to the growth of the beets. Fort Wayne gentlemen who have capital have been interested in the enterprise and they are able to enlist the capital of men who are experienced in the sugar beet industry. Much, therefore, now rests with the farmers of the county. Will they, in sufficient numbers to insure the practicability of establishing a factory, pledge themselves to the cultivation of sugar beets? The outlook in this regard is encouraging. A large number of the most progressive farmers of the county have already enlisted in the enterprise and will exert a powerful influence.

PULPIT EDITORIALS.

[Is intended to be a brief frame work for the sermons delivered in the pulpits of Fort Wayne on the previous Sunday.]

Listening to Fridjof Nansen as he tells a great auditorium full of people about his journey into the north, considering closely this man so wrapped up in his enthusiasm for discovery, catching something of his spirit of keen delight in the conquest over the secrets of nature, the preacher mind starts the question: "Of what use is a scientific explorer in the kingdom of heaven?" There are many and time and there were many more, who at once definitely answer: "None. He is worldly. Man's chief end is to glorify God and to worship him. This man is of the perishable earth earthy. Saints should be at home reading their Bible or at meeting singing psalms." During the middle ages this notion was as supreme among Christians; it made monasteries, anchorites, hermits. Even today it is potent in a modified form. Many Salvation Army folk go to meeting every night in the week. From much religious teaching in books and pulpits one gathers that his Christian life is not what God would have it unless one be, as much as his struggles for bread will allow, entirely occupied in singing, praying, testifying and listening to preaching.

Now, while some may be called to give themselves wholly to religious exercises, I do not believe that is the normal pattern of life the Father intended for us. In emergencies, upon certain occasions, it may be proper to lay aside all secular matters and concentrate our energies upon church work. But that is not the typical Christian life. We are put in this world to plow, to sow, to reap, to build, to explore, to study and to play. The normal religious life consists in doing these things like the children of God and not like beasts and cats. Religion is a spirit in which work is done, it is not work to be done. Earthly business is the world, religion is the time. When men have lost the tune or are off the key, it is proper enough that some of us give our whole energy to setting them right; but the Father never intended us to be all and always humming "songs without words." The most wholesome kind of Christianity is not that of preachers, deaconesses, priests and recluses, but that of businessmen, men hands, clerks, students and little children. Excessive spirituality easily merges into morbidity, often insanity; what we call "worldly" work is needed to ballast it.

Now, it seems to me, God prescribes for man two kinds of work, first, to complete His unfinished universe, second, to study it. That we should work for bread and clothes, for low wages to lay these, was not the original design. That sort of work was truly called a "curse." We are to labor as the child plays, for the delight of it. Have you noticed how we are just now beginning to see that Christ has redeemed us from this curse work? How? Why, Christianity makes civilization, civilization makes machinery, and more and more is machinery doing the hard work—until by and by it shall do it all, and as Bellamy describes in "The Coming Race" men will be merely superintendents directing the giant, tireless labors of electricity, heat, steam and the like. Then the curse will be removed, for earth will become a play ground; for play differs from work in this, that play is exertion made for the simple pleasure of the exercise, while work is exertion for a removed and future object.

The second kind of work designed for us is intellectual. As the bodily finds its health and pleasure in activity, so the mind would have its field and task. Therefore has the Father put in His worlds rich and toothsome problems for the intellect to search. The study of the sciences I am pursuing, will be the chief occupation of "heaven." Many centuries of scientific research as dry and hard, merely classifying, comparing, compiling. But on the contrary, it is the most entrancing and prophetic of all callings. Bishop Bell says: "We find that a certain capacity of elevation or poetic order is the most fruitful source of scientific discovery. For what are laws of science but ideas of God,—those regulative types of thought by which God created, moves and rules the world?" Another writer says: "I believe that many a problem of Euclid, Galileo, Newton and Kepler, and the system of many an equation, suppose so much inspiration and intuition as the finest ode of Pindar." Speaking of Kepler, Brewster describes this wonderful man who first broke into the ordinances of Heaven and got a foot hold there for definite science," and says of him: "Half mad with prophetic feeling, and astronomically possessed of the stars, he goes up among them, praying and poring and experimenting together; till, at last his divine formula sinks into place; the Harmonic law is revealed!" And he breaks out into a lofty frenzy, crying: "Nothing looks me! I indulge my sacred fury; I triumph over mankind! The die is cast, the book is written—to be read, either now, or by posterity. I care not which. It may well wait a century for a reader, as God has been waiting six thousand years for an observer."

As the mind of man is infinite in its possibilities, having in itself no limitations, but circumscribed only by time and death, so also to furnish it he employ eternally, it must have an infinite universe, and this has the Father provided. The true joy of the kingdom of Heaven, therefore, is in working with our Father in bringing order and beauty upon earth, living in the unclouded face of God, repeating in Him, saying periodic: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Also is this joy found in stretching out our minds upon the magnificent creation, the laws, its harmonies, its relations, exclaiming in sacred rapture to Him who abides with us: "O God, I think Thy thoughts after Thee!" Thus, therefore, the typical, normal, essential man is to be a Nansen or a Spencer or a Newton or an Edison, combined with an Augustine, a St. Bernard, a John Fletcher or a Thomas a Kempis. The spiritual is to come down and make one with the secular. Business will be shot through with love. Explorer and prophet shall be one man. Mountain and vast shall blend. I, the preacher, shall pass away, the scientist abides, but because he has analyzed me. They shall not touch every man his neighbor, saying, Know the Lord, for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest." John the seer saw the holy city and said: "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it."

FEARFUL CRIME.

Startling Confession Made by a Canadian Convict.

Accompanied by His Sentence He Murdered Two Women Scientific Thefts Outlined in a Minority.

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 29.—Oliver Prevost, alias Cauthier, now serving a sentence of seven years for stealing at Renfrew, has made a terrible confession to Crown Attorney McCall, at Pembroke, Ont. Prevost says that sometime ago he left his wife and went off with a Mrs. Cauthier, from Valleefield, Quebec, assuming Cauthier's name. They went to Fort Arthur, Ontario, and started a hotel. Two men, named Rose Dubin and Fred Carriere, lived in an old shanty near their hotel. The men called on Prevost February 16 last and remained for supper. Prevost says the woman, Cauthier, put poison in the tea for the men. Both men left the table and as the meal was finished one dropped dead in the house the other in another room, reaching the door. Prevost says that he and the woman took what money and valuables they could find on the men and then removed the bodies to the shanty. Prevost then set fire to the shanty and the bodies were cremated.

HOME IVY.

Ivy of Ireland is in gardens growing
Beside the foughmore that the wild fox haunts,
Here close to me that forrester or none
Over moths around me fly, and good women hum
The home ballads of a life as old as they come
The most wind lulled in it and at dusk

In whispers very lightly of green wings
The hollow paths, the fly or people sayings
And turned down a few Hollandaise had sings

And rude beside the ruined gate
Fast lift her precious head and, smiling, use
Her ladyship, closing eyes and about her hum

Ivy of Ireland, is the promise that
Shall bloom around the light "dead" hope and fear
But would to God the day we met were home

WITCH AND I.

Witch and I had a quarrel. Who is it that says that it takes two to make a quarrel? Whoever it is makes a mistake. It took only one to make our quarrel, and that was my precious Aunty Betsy Jane. Witch has a temper, so have I. She wasn't christened Witch. God forbid, and mothers have much to answer for; still I never heard of their giving Witch as a baptismal name to a Christian child. No, her name is Julia Felicia, which is simply absurd. Fancy a little, dark eyed, bewitching five feet nothing having a name like that!

My name is John, and John I'm always called. Had I been christened Robert or Thomas I should have been called by either of those plain, sensible names. There is nothing for the imagination to catch hold of in my face or figure. I'm not 6 feet in my stockings. I'm only 5 feet 10. I haven't curly golden hair, and a "tawny beard." No, my eyes, hair and beard are brown, and for the rest I have nondescript features and good teeth. Moreover, as I said before, I have a temper, a vile one, and in all things, apart from my profession, am a born fool.

It was over a game of tennis that Aunt Betsy Jane made us quarrel. Witch didn't play up, and I "chided" her. I'm "chided" Witch every now I've known her, and I've known her since she was 16, so she ought to have got used to it. For the matter of that, she wouldn't have took cruel her head about it if it hadn't been for my beloved aunt. Witch vixen me frightfully sometimes, but it never makes any difference.

Well, it was at one of Mrs. Dougall's "at homes" that the row began. Witch, Miss White, Dougall and I were playing tennis. Dougall and Miss White were against us. As a rule, Witch licks the other girl into fits, but on this occasion, for some reason or the other, she missed nearly every ball. I was annoyed, and I expressed myself perhaps a little more strongly than I ought to have done, for I'm sure I said something one shade stronger than I've said twelve or fifteen times without any offense being taken. In that as it may, Witch refused to play any more and sat down by Aunt Betsy Jane.

I am a doctor, and soon after that some one called me away. It was a bad case, and I didn't get home till midnight. In the dining room some cold meat and beer were waiting for me; so was a note from Witch. I ate a mouthful and drank a glass of beer. Then I opened the note. For a moment I felt as if I had a knife in my heart. It was such a cruel note. Witch—my little Witch—would have nothing more to do with me. My conduct at Mrs. Dougall's had proved to her that she no longer possessed my respect, and without respect love was not likely to last long, etc. She ended by saying that she would have returned my ring, but could not remove it from her finger, but that she would get the jeweler to cut it off tomorrow. I smiled a grim smile at the last sentence. I had no intention of allowing that ring to be cut off.

The lovely effusion puzzled me altogether. It wasn't in Witch's usual style. Naturally a note of that kind coming from her would have run in this way: "John, I hate and detest you and hope you'll keep out of my sight forever," or something like it. Well, I went to bed. I was such an ass that I never slept a wink all night. But I made up my mind what I would do. I got up early and made a good breakfast. Then I went into the surgery, saw my assistant, talked over the cases and told him I should be away all day. After that I went to town, straight to Witch's father's office. He hadn't arrived, but his people knew me and showed me into his private room. He and I are great friends, always have been. So it was quite natural for me to go to him for advice, or rather to talk over things. When he came in, he seemed rather surprised at seeing me, but after we had shaken hands he looked over his letters, gave some directions to his clerk, and then, turning to me, said, "Now, John."

"Can you spare me half an hour, sir?"

"As far as I know. Go ahead."

"Well, I'm making £300 a year, and my practice is increasing."

"That's good."

"Don't you think Witch and I might marry on that?"

"Certainly."

"You have no objection to our marrying next month, if she consents?"

"None. I have no wish that she should marry at all, but, if she must marry, I'd rather she married you than any one else."

"Thank you, sir, for saying that. Thank you very much," and I gratefully, among his hard and wringing it hard.

"Just so," said he, removing it from my grasp and looking sharply at it.

"But why this fervor?"

I put Witch a jewelled epistle in front of him. He read it twice through attentively, put it down and, looking calmly at me, said:

"Very interesting, but scarcely to be regarded as a precedent for very speedy matrimony. I should think"

"Ah, but it is, sir. A girl doesn't write a note like that and have done with it. No, she continues to write them. I shall probably get a number one a month now, and that will be very trying. I give you my word that I did not sleep a wink all last night. The practice won't stand that sort of thing long, you know," said I earnestly.

"You seem to have an accurate knowledge of women and their ways," he remarked dryly.

I allowed that speech to pass with our evasion. Comment seemed superfluous.

"If I might ask, I should like to know when you consider in fault in this little misunderstanding?" he asked.

"I am, sir. It stands to reason I should not be so anxious if she were in fault." And then I explained the whole matter, finishing up with, "I can't remember exactly what I called her, but, whatever it was, I didn't mean it."

"I am not able to refresh your memory as to what you said on that occasion, but I can tell you what I have heard you call her myself," said Mr. Druitt quietly, and then he told me.

His tone was a revelation to me. Not that I'd call Witch anything worse than "little fool," but I realized what it must have sounded like to the hearers and to him, her father. I don't know how I looked, but I felt mean, cheap, worthless—utterly so. I began to tumble out apologies. He waved his hand.

"All right," he said "but you are your language is at times forcible."

He is a wise man, so he said no more. He showed his wisdom therein, for I went at once to see Witch in a very contrite frame of mind. I was ready to make a mat of myself and let my darling trample on me if it should so please her, or to do any other extravagant thing such was the depth of my humility. Still, and poor eyed Pot as I was, I pondered as to what would have started up the strife between us. Suddenly it flashed across my mind that Witch had treated herself beside Aunt Betsy Jane, and that Aunt Betsy Jane was her godmother, and therefore bound to interfere. I am not going to explain how Aunt Betsy Jane came to be Witch's godmother. I am not a lady novelist, and the reader don't think it necessary to explain everything. It has nothing to do with this story. Besides I was only a mere old man when she was christened and wasn't consulted as to her opinions. To be sure, it must have been Aunt Betsy Jane who suggested the name.

When I arrived at the Cedars, it was about 12 o'clock. It all went well. There would rough between Witch and myself in an hour, and, if so, I would take her off to Richmond, get a boat from Messrs.'s, row up the river, come to anchor in a backwater I knew of between Richmond and Hampton and then make her name the day. But things didn't go well. They went cursedly badly instead. When Amelia (Amelia is the Dauntz housekeeper) opened the door and I inquired for Witch, she said gravely:

Then she showed me into the dining room. This was contrary to Mr. Druitt's message it is customary to see people who come on business—dressmakers, furniture, servants seeking places—in the dining room before lunch. Amelia left me and went up stairs. I rapidly diagnosed the situation. I took out my pocketbook and wrote, "My darling, I shall wait in the old boat at the end of the lawn till you can see me." And then I signed it "John."

Amelia came back. "If you please, sir, Miss Druitt does not feel equal to seeing you today, but will write to you tonight."

"Exactly," said I quietly. "Can you give me an envelope? Thanks! Give that to Miss Druitt, please."

The maid left the room, and I went into the garden. At the bottom of the garden ran the river, and on the river, chained to a post, was an old boat. It was seldom used, as the spot was not picturesque, but it was secluded, hidden both from the house and from passing boats by thick, drooping willows. It was here that Witch and I had come to the conclusion that we could not live without each other. I sat down in the boat, feeling very wrathy with Witch and bitter against Aunt Betsy Jane. I would have given much to know if she was in the house at that moment. I thought out all I had heard of the days of her youth. I felt mean and spiteful. I thought me of an old incident in her life wherein Aunt Betsy Jane had sailed very near the wind and had a narrow escape of moral wreck. I ought to have forgotten it, but I am not human. Both morally and physically I am commonplace, that is to say, if I'm struck I hit back, or try to. Would you believe it, I sat in that boat, savage when I got up and stretched myself, till 8 o'clock! It was nearly dark, and when I heard the clock strike I swore to myself that if Witch did not appear before the chiming of the quarter I would row the old boat down to the bridge, give a boy sixpence to bring it back again, and—well, when Witch went of me she might send for me. That was all.

It must have been very near the quarter when I saw stealing down the garden, her head and shoulders wrapped up in a white cloud, my Witch. A heart I thought so at first, but I soon saw it wasn't. It was some one more kin and less kind. Nevertheless, as the form drew near, peering about in the dusk I sprang forward, caught her in my arms and kissed her. She struggled, but I held her fast. She had no breath with which to utter a sound. She could only listen to my ardent—far more ardent than I ever bestowed on Witch—expressions of affection.

"My darling," I went on, "I know you would never have made such a little fool of yourself if it hadn't been for that mischievous contraban Aunt Betsy Jane." The form within my arms struggled. I was holding her tightly, or my foes might have suffered. "But I'll tell you a tale, dear, about her. I'm the only living soul that knows how old verse is dead." "You couldn't hear the form breathe, so still was it. I went on. "Aunt Betsy Jane is 45 now" the form wriggled. "About 25 years ago"—I could hear her heart beat. I relented. "No, Witch, I will not tell you that story. You have come to me, and I can afford to pity Aunt Betsy Jane. She was badly used when she was young, and she can't bear to see people happy now she is old."

The form muttered. Impossible arms. "Want to fetch something, dear? You shall, only come back at once, or I shall feel like telling that old tale about Aunt Betsy Jane."

She scuttled off to the house, and in a minute or two Witch came down the garden in a very dignified manner. I let her come right to the edge of the water and peer about. I knew she couldn't see me. Presently she said anxiously:

"John!" My heart jumped but I didn't intend to give myself away, so I simply said, "Well?" But she didn't intend to give herself away either. She turned. Then I saw that I had my work cut out for me.

"Stay, Witch! I'm in the boat." I exclaimed in a tone of deepest entreaty as I scrambled on shore. She paused. I caught hold of her hand. "Witch," I cried reproachfully, "I've been waiting here for nearly eight hours, and I'm as faint I can hardly speak."

That fetched her. A woman will go cheerfully for hours without a wrench, six yards and yards of shopping on a half penny bun and think nothing of it, but let a man only say that he has missed his lunch, and she makes so much fuss over him as if he had suffered the martyrdom of St. Lawrence.

"You poor thing!" exclaimed my darling. "Come in at once and have something to eat."

"No, Witch," I said faintly, but firmly. "You must forgive me."

"Forgive you! Of course I forgive you. I didn't know you had been here all that time. Do come in at once, or you'll die, I know you will."

But I stuck to my guns, and I didn't go indoors until I had made Witch promise that we should be married that day month. Then I consented to go in and work mightily have among the earthen.

Aunt Betsy Jane came to our wedding and made us a handsome present. Then she went to live with some friends in the north. I think the poor old soul had had some suspicion that I knew her story, and so tried to part me and Witch. She took my note from Amelia in the morning and kept it for that reason. My darling did not know I was in the boat until Aunt Betsy Jane came in from the garden and told her.

But I have never told my wife a word. It isn't wise to tell your wife all the little peccadilloes of your friends and relations.—Daughter

WHAT AILED THE CROWD.

"Gems of Thought" Was a Good Book, but It Wouldn't Sell.

There were three men sitting on the veranda of the hotel, each with a tired look and a satchel on the floor beside him, when a fourth came up the steps and accosted the man on his right with:

"Sir, you are an educated, cultivated gentleman, and I am sure you will appreciate what I have to show you. I have here a work entitled 'Gems of Thought'—1,000 pages, 450 illustrations, three styles of binding, price from $3 to $6. Will you do me the favor to—"

"No, sir," was the vigorous reply. "No, sir. I want nothing in your line."

The book agent passed on to the next man, who was leaning on his elbows and looking into vacancy. He was given the title of the work, the number of pages, illustrations, etc., but he never moved an eyelash. The book was produced and the styles of binding shown, but his eyes were fixed on the shade trees on the opposite side of the street. After talking to him for ten minutes and receiving no response the weary agent turned to the third man and said:

"Sir, you have doubtless heard what I have had to say to those gentlemen?"

"No, sir, not a word," was the reply.

"I am selling a subscription book."

"Oh, you are?"

"It is entitled 'Gems of Thought,' and here it is—"

"Very nice look, very nice. I should think you could sell 'em by the hundred. What's the highest price?"

"Six dollars, sir, and in this style of binding. Look at these beautiful illustrations."

"Yes, very nice. A great deal of money must have been spent on those illustrations, and the book ought to be in every gentleman's library. Only $6, eh? Wonderfully cheap, wonderfully so."

"Yes, sir, it is. May I hope that you will take a copy?"

"No, sir. I wouldn't take one home as a gift."

The agent sighed. "Can you tell me, sir?" he said as he stepped back a pace—"can you tell me what in Texas ails this crowd just about now?"

"I can, sir," was the reply. "We are all book agents, and we've worked this town twice over and haven't made a sale. Perhaps you'd better sit down and feel homesick with the rest of us."

Going out to Win.

"General Sparkins," said the secretary of war, "has the army been thoroughly drilled in plugging punctures?"

"Yes, sir. The average time was three minutes at the last general inspection."

"Good! How are the men in that firing while mounted evolution?"

"Seventy-five per cent can pass muster, sir."

"How about the percentage for that regiment of double recovery rubber?"

"Ninety all full, sir."

"Excellent! Now we will pass the bicycle factories and declare war on Spain."—New York Journal.

Necessary Improvement.

"Did you hear my speech?" said Senator Sorghum. "I am told that I wove a subtle hypnotic spell about my hearers from which they vainly endeavored to break away."

"Yes," replied his careful friend; "I heard that a great many of them went to sleep."—Washington Star.

"But you might learn to love me," pleaded the young man to the elderly heiress. "She is never too old to learn, you know."—Indianapolis Journal.

Pertinent Questions.

Why Will a Woman Throw Away Her Good Looks and Comfort?

Why will a woman drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence and miss three-quarters of the joy of living, when she has health almost within her grasp? If she does not value her good looks, does she not value her comfort?

Why, my sister, will you suffer that dull pain in the small of your back, those bearing-down, dragging sensations in the loins, that terrible fullness in the lower bowel, caused by constipation proceeding from the weak lying over and pressing on the rectum? Do you know that these are signs of displacement, and that you will never be well while that lasts?

What a woman needs who is thus affected is to strengthen the ligaments so they will keep her organs in place. There is nothing better for this purpose than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The great volume of testimony which is constantly rolling in, proves that the Compound is constantly curing thousands of just such cases.

The following letter from Mrs. Marlow is only one of many thousands which Mrs. Pinkham has received this year from those who has relieved—surely such testimony is convincing:

"My trouble commenced after the birth of my last child. I did not know what was the matter with me. My husband went to our family physician and described my symptoms, and he said I had displacement and falling of the womb. He sent me some medicine, but it did little good. I let it go on about two years, and every time I did any hard work my womb would come down. Finally a lady friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did. The first bottle helped me so much, I continued to take it right along. My back was almost the same as my back. I could stand scarcely any weight. My life was just a drag to me. To-day I am well of my womb trouble, and have a good, strong back, thanks to Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. L. Marlow, Milford, Ill.

Killing Mosquitoes.

Two and one half hours are required for a mosquito to develop from its first stage, a spark resembling cholera bacteria, to its active and venomous maturity, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean. The insect in all its phases may be instantly killed by contact with mixture consisting of permanganate of potash. It is claimed that one part of this substance in 1,500 of solution distributed in mosquito marshes will render the development of larvae impossible; that a handful of permanganate will sanitize a ten acre swamp, kill the embryo insects and keep it free from organic matter for thirty days at a cost of twenty-five cents; that with care a whole state may be kept free of insect pests at a small cost. As ablutions method is to scatter a few crystals where water is. A single pinch of permanganate has killed all the germs in a 1,000-gallon tank.

Paint in Gloss.

Paint will do wonders. A woman in Devonshire, England, recently used on a chemist. "I've got a cruel bad cough, surely. I've heard that brown tree tops are good things. Have you any?" The assistant pointed to a small box on the table and said: "Yes, there they are." "How much is it?" was the inquiry. The price was paid, and the old woman took her departure. At night the assistant missed a box of glycerine soap (three cakes). A couple of days afterward the returned to the shop and said: "I want to take back one of those things I had rather day. I took one of 'em. It was mortal hard to chew and awful to swallow, but it cured the cough."

Bone Dust Bounds of Sandbags.

Sandbags are less liable than nonsmokers to contract diphtheria and other throat diseases, in the ratio of 1 to 28. So says Professor Balzer of Vienna.

Bone a Portion Was Lost.

A London electrician recently invented an apparatus intended to greatly simplify a certain process of manufacture. This he perfected in his own factory and provisionally patented. Other processes then occupied his attention and by some mischance he forgotten his right to complete the patent. Others afterward intervened, and in his absence the apparatus went wrong, and a workman was called in to put matters right. He realized the value of the invention, thoroughly mastered the intricacies of the apparatus, and straightway drew up a specification and obtained letters patent. Almost at once afterward of the right to use the apparatus to a certain number of firms, and found himself in a moment the richer by close upon £100,000. Meanwhile the actual inventor merely enjoyed the right to use the apparatus in his own works.

Beauty.

It is difficult to say what constitutes beauty or what is its criterion. The Sandwich Islanders estimate women by their weight. The Chinese require their women to have small feet and deformed feet. A girl must be narrowed shoulders and wear a nose ring to satisfy the South Sea Islanders. African princes require their brides to have their teeth filed like those of a saw. And they pass the world, the criterion of beauty differing greatly with different degrees of latitude and longitude.

Using Foam Preserve Rags.

In a German process for making brick from blast furnace slag the molten slag, as it leaves the furnace, is subjected to the action of a stream of water, which reduces it to a sharp sand. It is then mixed with milk of lime, stirred by machinery, molded into forms and allowed to dry a few days. The lighter grades of slag make the best brick and require less time.

A RAILWAY DEAL.

The Illinois Central About to Buy the Findlay Road.

Representatives of Both Companies Met Inspecting the Property in Question—News of the Day.

Negotiations which have been pending for some months and which are likely to ultimately result in the Illinois Central assuming control of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western railroad, were advanced today to a point which indicates that the deal has gone further than the public was aware and that its consummation is near at hand. This morning a party of gentlemen who represented the Illinois Central and Findlay railway companies came down from Chicago in special cars attached to Pennsylvania train No. 6 and were met here by C. M. Bissell, general manager of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western company, who accompanied them upon an inspection of the Findlay line. They will return here tonight and their cars will be attached to No. 15 and taken to Chicago in the morning. The names of the Chicago gentlemen and their mission are thus given in this morning's Chicago Tribune:

"John Jacob Astor and a distinguished party of eastern capitalists and railroad magnates arrived in Chicago yesterday afternoon from New York to take steps for voiding several short lines of western roads into a new trunk line from Chicago to New York. The new route is to find its terminals over the Nickel Plate and the Illinois Central. It is but another giant link in the Vanderbilt trunk line system, having for its special purpose an invasion of the Pennsylvania road's Ohio and Indiana territory and to provide more adequate terminal facilities in this city for the Nickel Plate road, as well as the practical construction of a double track for that road from Cleveland to this city.

"Those in the party were Mr. Astor, A. B. Ely, George Chapman, and G. F. Hawkins, of New York, and W. T. Rainey, of Philadelphia. With the exception of Mr. Hawkins, who is Mr. Astor's private secretary, they are all directors of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western railroad, a short line of only eighty miles, extending from Fort Wayne to Findlay, Ohio.

"The railway men arrived in an ordinary sleeper and left at 11:30 at night for Findlay in two private cars, together with Vice President Harahan, of the Illinois Central, and Traffic Manager T. J. Hudson and Chief Engineer David Sloan, of the same line. In Findlay they will meet today Dr. Seward Webb and James B. Roosevelt, of New York, and C. M. Bissell, of Findlay, also directors of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western road, and it will be at this meeting of the directors that the line of action proposed will be decided upon.

"There was no attempt to conceal the specific work to be accomplished at today's meeting, although there was no disposition to discuss the real results which lie behind it.

"Mr. Ely, who was the spokesman of the party, said the purpose of the meeting was to decide upon eastern and western extensions of the road in question, which has heretofore been of a purely local character, that practically would amount to converting it into trunk line, reaching from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard.

"To this end, Mr. Ely said, the directors undoubtedly would vote to extend the road west from Fort Wayne about 200 miles to Kankakee, from which point traffic arrangements would be made with the Illinois Central road, which would provide a Chicago entry.

"Regarding the eastern connection, he would say nothing save that negotiations were in progress with a road which would give the new road an outlet in that direction. He did not think the time ripe, he said, for indicating what particular road was expected to give the desired eastern connection, but he intimated that he had little doubt that any trouble would be experienced in carrying the contemplated program through to a successful completion.

"Mr. Harahan and the other officials of the Illinois Central, he explained, accompanied the party to give the directors the results of their experience and knowledge of the work to be taken in hand.

"Although Mr. Ely declined to divulge the name of the Eastern road with which negotiations are being conducted, there can be little doubt it is the Nickel Plate. Everything points so clearly in that direction as to make this a practical certainty.

"In the first place it is only about fifteen miles from Findlay, in a nearly due easterly direction, but the logic of the situation points to it as almost certain connections would at.

"By making this connection with it the latter road will be provided with a practical double track system from Cleveland to this city, and thus equipped the Vanderbilt system expects to be able to make a big cut into the Pennsylvania's territory west of Cleveland. This has been a particularly rich field for the Pennsylvania system, and the Vanderbilts have long been looking for an opportunity of cutting into it.

"The present plan has been an old consideration for some time, but the depressed condition of business in general has caused a postponement until better times were in prospect. As Mr. Ely and Mr. Astor both said, the present is a particularly auspicious time for railroad construction, as materials are exceedingly cheap, and the business outlook is of a character to encourage the belief that better times are in store for railroad properties.

"The move is also of importance as certain to provide much better facilities for the Nickel Plate in this city, as well as giving it an independent entrance to Chicago. At present it comes in over another Vanderbilt line, and its facilities are limited to its Twelfth street yards."

The following is an Associated Press dispatch:

"FINDLAY, O., Nov. 29.

"John Jacob Astor and other directors of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western railway are holding a meeting here this afternoon. The supposed object is to consider the matter of the extension of this line eastward from Findlay. A preliminary survey has already been made. Vice President Harahan, together with other Illinois Central officials, are in attendance at the meeting. This, together with the fact that a survey has been made for an extension of the Findlay, Fort Wayne and Western road from the present western terminus at Fort Wayne to a junction with the Illinois Central, fifty-six miles south of Chicago, causes much interest to today's meeting."

WILL BUILD A NEW DEPOT.

Work on the proposed new union station of the Pennsylvania railroad, at Pittsburg, it is said, will be commenced by the first of the new year. Chief Engineer Brown has in the past three years made no less than fourteen different sets of plans for a station at Pittsburg. The depot will be located about where the present one is, but will cover more ground. The building is to be 160x300 feet, and will be four stories in height. There will be a rotunda of eighty-five feet. On the first floor will be baggage rooms, ticket offices, etc. The waiting rooms will be on the second floor, and the upper floors will be used as offices. There will be nineteen elevated tracks leading to the depot, sixteen for passenger trains and three for freight trains.

SO 1899 IT THIS YEAR.

The Pennsylvania company, the parent line, will not need to make up deficits of the poorer members of its system to the extent of former years. The Allegheny Valley road, one of its lines, in 1895 showed a deficit of $187,000, and in 1896 a deficit of $218,000, but on October 31 it had a surplus of $10,000, its November business exceeding all former records. It is believed that the Pennsylvania will have but a small, if any deficit this year to put up for the Indianapolis and Vincennes road. For the first ten months this year the Northern Central, another Pennsylvania line, shows an increase in net earnings of $331,228.74, and has two months of good business to swell that sum.

EASTBOUND SHIPMENTS.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—Eastbound freight shipments for the week ending November 75, amounted to 41,461 tons, against 47,901 the previous week and 6,466 last year divided among the different roads as follows: Pinkandle, 6,521 tons; Michigan Central, 6,561; Wabash, 4,015; Lake Shore, 5,273; Fort Wayne, 6,149; Baltimore and Ohio, 2,706; Grand Trunk, 3,192; Nickel Plate, 2,500; Erie, 3,212; Big Four, 2,015. The lake lines carried 106,482 tons.

A LONG SERVICE.

Thirty-nine years ago tomorrow Henry Jones, the well known passenger engineer, was at the throttle of the engine which hauled the first train into Chicago over the Pittsburg road. Since that eventful day Mr. Jones has continued in the service of the company in the same capacity and left this morning upon his regular run, No. 21, for Chicago.

THE CHICAGO AND ROCK ISLAND.

The Chicago and Rock Island is said to have $4,000,000 loaned on good security in the east.

Fred Kayser, of the electric works, was the guest of friends at Goar Creek over Sunday.

Calvin S. Brice emphatically denies that the Brice syndicate has any desire to secure control of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton lines.

The western roads have agreed that on and after January 1 all carriers shall pay the same rate for car mileage as is paid by railroad companies under car service rules, and they have asked all the other associations to adopt a similar course.

Hugo Lund, a student of Purdue university, who spent Thanksgiving with friends in this city, returned to the school this morning.

The Pennsylvania handled at this point yesterday 42 cars, making fifteen trains on its main line and at least half that number on the Grand Rapids branch.

At its meeting tomorrow evening the Machinists' union will initiate two candidates. After the regular order of business the members of the union will indulge in a smoker.

Members of the Joint Traffic association have ordered a sixteen cent export rate on corn from Buffalo to Montreal, and twenty-five cents from Buffalo to Halifax and St. Johns.

Thomas Mitsler, a clerk at the Wabash shops, has recovered from an attack of malarial fever which confined him to his home more last Wednesday. He resumed his place at the desk this morning.

Henry Bickness, of the Pittsburg blacksmith shop, is afflicted with rheumatism and will be unable to work for a few days at least. Henry Dryer and E. B. Moore, of the same shop, are also on the sick list.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new shops of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton at Lima, Ohio. Citizens of Lima are intending to have a grand demonstration when the shops are completed.

Charles Hardendorf and F. Baude have resumed their respective places in the Pittsburg shops after a few days' absence. The former had been sick and the latter was visiting relatives near Pittsburg, Pa.

Blacksmith John Slater has recovered from his recent illness sufficiently to resume his duties in the Pittsburg shops. Frank Opatz, also a blacksmith in the same shop, is working again after an absence on account of sickness.

George Killen, whose strange illness caused considerable newspaper comment a few weeks ago, has nearly recovered his health and will resume his place in the Pittsburg shops next Wednesday if the improvement in his condition continues.

The shipments from the electric works today included a 1200 light alternating machine to LeRoy, Ill., a 25 light arc machine to Scranton, Pa., a 660 light incandescent machine and all the material for equipping the station to Tallahoma, Tenn., and a large motor to San Francisco, Cal.

The increase in earnings of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern has encouraged the owners of the property to go ahead and make marked improvements to road bed and equipment. Several important improvements were considered at the annual meeting and President Bacon is given authority to proceed and make them.

The general offices of the Mobile and Ohio road were taken from St. Louis back to Mobile Saturday. A special train left the Union station at 8 o'clock, having on board the general offices, the clerks and employes and their families to the number of about 300. The officials and clerks have been away from their homes since September 13.

WORD CONTEST.

Something in Literature, Interest and Pleasure the Young, the Old and the Middle Aged.

As the winter evenings are drawing nigh, when the young and old folks will have plenty of time for thought and work, we have discovered a little plan for their entertainment and amusement which will handsomely compensate them for the time and pains they may devote to it. We want to know how many words can be made from the letters,

THE FORT WAYNE SENTINEL.

Use each letter as desired, but not more times than it appears in "THE FORT WAYNE SENTINEL." Verbs, pronouns, adjectives, nouns, adverbs, plurals allowed. Words spelled alike, but having different meanings, count as one word. Use any standard dictionary. All legitimate English words count. Proper names, prefixes, suffixes, obsolete and foreign words do not count. Work it out as follows: Tar, tray, hat, her, eat, sel, fail, first, etc., etc.

To the person making the largest list of words from the twenty letters found in THE FORT WAYNE SENTINEL we will pay $5.00, to the second, $3.00, to the third, $1.5, to the fourth, $10.

The words must be written on one side of the sheet and numbered and sent to this office addressed to

WORD EDITOR,

Not later than December 23, 1896, as the contest closes on the evening of that date. Begin now, but do not send in lists till near the close of the contest, as it is desired that all who engage in this competition shall strive earnestly to win the prize.

This is open to every man, woman and child in Fort Wayne, and Allen county and every county adjoining Allen. No other conditions are imposed, it makes no difference whether you are a subscriber to THE SENTINEL or not. All are eligible to enter the contest. Tell your neighbors and friends about it.

A GREAT EVANGELIST.

Two Powerful Sermons Preached Yesterday in Bethany Church.

One of the most powerful evangelists who has preached in Fort Wayne since the visit of Mr. Mosely is the Rev. Mr. Bulgin who is now conducting a series of meetings in Bethany Presbyterian church. Yesterday he spoke to large houses making a powerful impression at each service. Although the first evangelistic meeting in the series there was a number of professions last night. Mr. Bulgin is a man of striking personal appearance and of great magnetism, a fine pulpit orator and a strong pleader for the gospel. His success elsewhere has been most remarkable. In Chattanooga there were more than 100 conversions, in Williamson, N. Y., more than 300, likewise in Albany. The work of this evangelist is not of the sensational sort, so the results of his work are not ephemeral. Of the more than 1,600 conversions under his ministry last winter the pastors write that not more than twenty have proven unfaithful to their vows. This is a remarkable record.

There are two services held daily in the afternoon at 3 o'clock a Bible lecture and at 7:30 the evangelistic meeting. The song service under the leadership of a chorus choir begins fifteen minutes earlier.

Absolute Indian Work.

In one of the Indian religious ceremonies a big wooden wedge is driven apparently through a woman's head from one temple to the other. The effect is exceedingly realistic, the woman's eyes seeming to start from the sockets and hang down on her cheeks while blood flows in streams. As a matter of fact, the wedge shows the audience is secretly exchanged for one consisting of two parts attached to a wooden band, covered with hair, that is slipped over the head. Thus it seems as if the head had passed out on one side, the point having passed through the skull. At the same time bladders containing blood attached to the band, are punctured and the blood flows down the woman's face. The wedge being removed, she is all right again and the phenomenon passes for a quasi-religious miracle. The contracting eyes are the eyes of a real, living one, the freshest.

Curious Fools and Their Money.

Two fools robbed the Union County bank at Morganfield, Ky., of $1,000 a few days ago in a short distance out of town, and no one being in the private President James and the cashier went to work together. They locked the vault and the doors, but left the $1,000 in a drawer in the cashier's desk. When Mr. James returned half an hour later he found the door wide open and the desk rifled. It became known afterward that the robbery was done by two men, and they broke into the bank soon after it was left alone. There is no clue to the thieves.

A QUEER MEMORIAL.

Both when the sale monuments the Parisians are said to be in one of the smaller parks in Paris has been erected a monument to the memory of Guy de Maupassant, the great master of the art of the short story, and of school of fiction. It is that of a lovely Parisian in conception, and yet in its place is the pride of the French capital. Where is it? In Bizarre.

On a high pedestal is a bust of the author, which is quite conventional. But at the base of the shaft is the figure of a woman reclining on a couch, holding a lamp in her hand. It is only the figure of an idealized woman, who is a Parisian of rather genteel in the mode, but it is proper for the Latin Quarter, and with her hair down a la Mode, her shoulders and bodice in the figure that you can wonder because that is not of marble. There has been no end of comment in the treatment of the artist. The ruffles on the bosom of her underclothing display it is just that she effect which they are meant to give, and her whole dress seems more like the costume of some small vaudeville than the work of a sculptor.

It is said that the statue was conceived by a woman admirer of Maupassant, who speculated that a figure of herself should adorn the monument. Hence the sculptor in order to please his patroness, has made her stylish and good looking. She is in a reflective frame of mind, evidently and looks as though she might be think my how disappointing it was that Maupassant was dead and could write no more charming stories.

The author of "Mademoiselle" however, evidently needs no setting, a monument so rare has come from oblivion for although it is only a few years since he dropped the pen, after lingering for a short time in a madhouse, yet now, after another few weeks have already become classics of French literature.

Neighborly Instinct.

Smith—I don't like to make any complaint to a neighbor, Mr. Jones, but your dog keep up a terrible barking about my place.

Jones—Oh, that's all right. he's used to it—wouldn't hurt him a bit. Kind of you to mention it, however.—Boston Transcript.
